Sonja Caywood, left, leads a class step by step through the process of painting a cow portrait at SAGE Community Arts Saturday, Jan. 18, 2020.
SHERIDAN — Artists don't live paycheck to paycheck — instead, they live sale to sale, and with that uncertainty comes a specific lifestyle unique to the arts.

“I always dreamed of being an artist, but life circumstances and finances didn’t permit me a formal education, nor the luxury of time to pursue art as a full-time endeavor early on,” said Sonja Caywood, who has studio space in Dayton and is well-known for her expressionist artwork.

“This didn’t stop me, though, from making time for art whenever I could, and taking classes and workshops when possible, even when my schedule was busy with family, horses and working two jobs,” she said.

Working jobs outside the art world is key — many with dreams of making it as an artist find themselves doing other things to supplement their income. And that is OK.

“Similarly to the majority of artists I know, my fine art career is a part-time venture,” Polly Burge, who has studio space in Sheridan and works on commission, said. “I have to have other jobs, in addition to taking commissioned artwork, in order to help support my creative work.”

Burge said that the most important thing for anyone thinking about pursuing a creative means of income is to accept, or even embrace, other jobs and work opportunities that may afford the time to stir in creativity.

“Doing so also helps to fend off loneliness,” she said. “I used to get very frustrated when I had to do anything else but work in my studio because I felt like I wasn’t giving it everything I had... but, I also had to eat and pay bills.”

She also wanted a life.

“I wanted to have fun and enjoy my friends, too. Not to mention, I really need human interaction as a basic means to acquire patronage,” Burge said. “I have learned to time-block for the studio and balance it with other means of income, so that my creative time is productive and far less stressful.”

Kendra Heimbuck, executive director of SAGE Community Arts in Sheridan, said that at SAGE, up-and-coming artists can interact with and engage with artists of all walks of life, from hobby artists to people who are making a living through their craft. SAGE offers support to artists in a number of ways, whether a brand-new artist wants to take a class or a seasoned artist wants to teach one.

SAGE also offers two gallery spaces within its downtown location. The members gallery is open to all SAGE members for display and sale.

“That space is filled with artwork from all sorts of artists who are doing it as a hobby, or just want to get their work out there,” Heimbuck said.

Then there is the exhibition gallery, where artists have the chance to show solo or as a part of a group.

“These are artists who are a little further along in the process and are growing as professional artists. It is a bit more of a competitive space,” she said.

Caywood said that in 2012, when she left Sheridan County School District 1 after a 17-year career, she started teaching two hour painting classes to earn a more steady income.

“It wasn’t long before my work was earning enough that I no longer had to teach, but I’d realized that not only do I have a gift for making art accessible and fun for non-painters and beginners, but that I truly benefit from teaching,” she said. “I enjoy seeing their faces when they look at their paintings and realize they made a real piece of art. I teach a limited number of classes now to share the freedom and joy of art-making with community members.”

Both Caywood and Burge said they learn from other artists, both locally, around the world and even on social media.

“My goal is to engage with people thrilled by everything there is to know about art. It’s so fun,” Burge said.

Caywood said that carving out time for art has been key to her success.

“The time I’d carved out of a busy life to make and market my art paid off when I was afforded the time, as knowing how important it was disciplined me,” she said, adding that on her blog, she has a post entitled “Letter to My Young Artist Self.”

RIVERTON NEWS EXCHANGE

RIVERTON — There’s no shortage of information about the famous blizzard of 1949, probably the most famous weather event in Wyoming history — but Don Strube’s story stands out.

The longtime Riverton resident lived through it, bit it took luck, creativity, and the kindness of strangers. Seventy years later, he remembers it in vivid detail.

Strube reminisced about the storm as its 70th anniversary year came to an end. He and eight schoolmates at Albin High School spent days huddled in a tiny rural cabin after being stranded in the storm miles from home.

He was a senior in high school then, as were several of his companions that day, although some were as young as seventh grade.

Accompanying Strube were Charles Pearson, his sister Jo Ann Pearson, their younger brother Richard Pearson, Mary Jean Boyce, and brothers Gene and John Lemaster.

They had eaten at the caf in Albin owned by Strube’s aunt and uncle, Pete and Mary Thomas. It was Sunday, Jan. 2, 1949.

“After lunch, we got into the 1948 Chevrolet that the Pearson family had just bought recently. It was a four-door,” Strube recalled. “Then we headed over to Pine Bluffs for a movie.”

The world had changed

Brothers Richard and Don Strube in January 1949 in the small southeastern Wyoming town of Albin. They had ridden horses from their family’s farm into town two days after historic “Blizzard of ’49” cleared the region. Don Strube, right, and a group of 15 other friends and strangers were stranded for days in a tiny rural cabin when the ferocious storm hit.

off the road.
The situation was bad, but it might have been worse, Strube said.

“The sun was shining. It was a balmy day when we left Albin” on the 20-mile drive to Pine Bluffs in the southeast corner of the state.

“We went into a matinee at about 1:30 p.m.”

When they came out shortly before 3 o’clock, it was as if the entire world had changed.

“We walked out into a roaring blizzard,” Strube said.

Not understanding the magnitude of what was happening, the seven friends got back into the car and headed back home for Albin.

Conditions worsened quickly. They were trying to drive during Wyoming’s worst winter storm of the 20th century.

“All 10 of us got out of the car and managed to get up to the house with Pearl. We didn’t have any proper winter clothes on. It had been a nice day when we started out, and we were planning on being in the car and in the movie theater. That was a long walk up that hill.”

The Castor farmhouse wasn’t much, a small homestead shack with poured concrete walls, two small bedrooms, a tiny front room, and a small kitchen space.

The Castors had eaten dinner for the night, and there wasn’t enough food to feed the unexpected visitors.

Soon it was time for bed. The roof in the over the small house was so poor that snow had blown inside and piled on Mr. and Mrs. Castor’s bed.

“When they went to bed they removed six or eight washtubs of snow on the top of their bed,” Strube said. “The three of us boys (the high school seniors) sat in front of the stove with our feet in it. The rest of us tried to rest in the small living room with what little heat came from the stove. The four Castor kids slept in the other bedroom.”

All four of the Castor children were of adult age, although Strube recalled that the sons appeared to have a developmental disability that limited their speech.

“There were 16 of us in there. It was cozy,” he joked.

A stack of firewood got the group through the night. The snow was so intense, and unrelenting through the night, that there was no possibility of seeing the small outhouse, much less getting to it.

“When we needed to go to the bathroom, we just went right outside,” Strube said. “If you got 10 feet from the house you couldn’t see anything.”

“Some days, being alone with my work in the studio feels like sitting in front of a mirror surrounded by clutter and trash,” Burge said. “I am also the one responsible for attaching the price tag — have to decide what this small extension of myself is worth, then put a dollar sign in front of it. I realize the images I create can’t be used like tools and my art doesn’t serve any utilitarian purpose — my work is most likely an aesthetic garnish to a room... nobody ‘needs’ the product of my energy as a fine artist. That’s really tough when your heart is telling you it’s the thing you love and are meant to do. And if you do it all the time and create a large volume of work, it’s easy to just assume people will buy it.”

“Well, they don’t,” she said. “So, the best way I’ve come to combat the self-scrutinizing ‘price tag effect’ is by giving away little pieces that I love. I have an entire pin-board wall in my studio where I put up thumbnails, sketches, draft drawings and even just scrap pieces of painted watercolor paper that I think are pretty. If I need some room or if I’m just ready to look at something else, I’ll pull them down and give them away.”

She said she’s mailed pieces to friends and family, given them to visitors, sent them to past patrons, tucked them into thank you notes and folded them into books she’s borrowed.

“I feel those folks have really appreciated the art as well as the gesture, and it means I don’t have to throw it away or add it to another pile in my studio,” she said. “It’s become another way to deepen connections with my loved ones and it’s been really fun to see what people do with them. Fridge or frame — it’s an honor to see it in homes of friends, it brings me a lot of joy.”
